Tobacco Report

Beginning in July 1939 with the discouraging prices on the openings of Georgia markets, farmers of the State looked towards August 3rd with apprehension as to what the first day sales would bring forth in South Carolina.

In several public addresses, prior to the opening, both Governor Maybank and Commissioner Jones had given assurance to the farmers that the markets would be watched closely and every effort under the law be used to see that the farmers received a fair price for their offerings.

The markets opened August 3rd with prices below 1938 but generally accepted with some satisfaction by the growers. The farmers were encouraged that the early prices were somewhat higher than Georgia where the season opened July 25th.

With declaration of war and the sudden withdrawal of the big British concerns, such as Imperial and Export, the markets were immediately closed to protect an obvious slump in prices.

Closing in mid-September, the markets were re-opened October 10th. In the meantime tobacco growers had voted overwhelmingly in a referendum to limit the 1940 crop.

Through use of funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation Government officials proposed using Imperial facilities to buy tobacco and later giving Imperial an option to purchase as convenient to them securing ships to transport same.

When the markets re-opened the price was down but not as much as some feared. On six markets operating in October after the re-opening, the price averaged 11.28c compared to the season's average of 14.58c.

Sales for producers for the 1939 season was 117,217,526 pounds with an average price of 14.557c totaling $17,063,399.26.

The average price for 1938 of 22.23 cents per pound was 7.68 cents above 1939 which accounts for the two million dollar decrease in income although production in 1939 was approximately thirty million pounds greater.

More than twenty-two thousand South Carolina farm families depend on tobacco, wholly or in part, for their cash income. It is truly one of the major crops of the Palmetto State. The rich Pee Dee section of South Carolina is the home of the great tobacco crop. And this section plays an important part in the agricultural life of the State.

Beginning in 1884 when one farmer planted a "patch" of tobacco "as an experiment" this crop has grown until this year it covered 101,000 acres and brought the producers $15,887,753.08. This remarkable development received special notice in 1935 when the "Tobacco Golden Jubilee" was observed at Florence on October 8th.

Tobacco Field

The pioneer tobacco farmer of South Carolina is Frank M. Rogers, Sr., who delivered an address at the Golden Jubilee. Mr. Rogers told an interesting story of the early growing of tobacco in this State.

In 1885, just fifty years ago, Mr. Rogers planted three acres of tobacco. Under instructions from a Virginia farmer he cured the leaf and shipped it to market in North Carolina. His crop brought him a little more than $600.

From this small beginning of one farmer in 1885 to 22,000 tobacco farmers in 1939 is a long jump. From $600 to nearly eighteen millions tells the story in terms of dollars.

It was five years after Mr. Rogers grew and marketed his first crop when the first tobacco warehouse was built in South Carolina. In 1890 the first warehouse in the State was erected at Florence. That year Mr. Rogers went to North Carolina and through the cooperation of J. B. Duke of Durham and other manufacturers he was able to secure a strong force of buyers to open the first market in this State. Today there are thirty-nine active warehouses in South Carolina where tobacco is sold.

The following tables give location of warehouses, monthly market sales, each warehouse sale for the season and yearly total comparisons:
